He came to show us a way to love and live

In Luke 2:11 we read, “to you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is the Messiah, the Lord.” We may ask why God sent his Son into the world. As in the gospel story, we may answer that he came to the shepherds who were looking after their sheep, but not only to them. He came to the marginalized, the voiceless, to victims of exploitation and violence, to a broken world, to those without hope and to those with hope. God sent his Son into the world so that the world through him might be saved.

The birth of the Christ child is for Christians, the birth of the Messiah as proclaimed by the prophets of old. At the heart of this narrative is the conviction that God intervened in human history and became human in the person of Jesus. This act of unconditional love by God is for the sake and salvation of all.

The incarnation is that God chose to come among us and share in our humanity.

CHRISTMAS MESSAGE
By Bishop Peter Fenty

We believe in Jesus Christ, that he is with us and that he offers comfort, hope, reconciliation and healing. We rejoice in the knowledge that in the birth of the child of Bethlehem, he came among us to offer a better way of living. Jesus’ coming into the world is about making a difference, transforming lives, offering peace and hope where there is brokenness and division.

In Jesus Christ the Way, the Truth and the Life, we look to him who shows us a more “excellent way” of being. He shows us how we should love, forgive, be compassionate, and live in community as good neighbours. The incarnation is the Good News of how individuals, families, and communities can be...
Lay leaders brought closer to God

Program piloted here and abroad

BY STUART MANN

LORRAINE Bell had been attending Trinity Church, Aurora for five years but had always felt that something was missing. She volunteered to help out with mailings and other tasks, but the feeling remained.

“I felt somewhat stuck in my own spiritual journey,” she says. “I wasn’t connecting with God in the way I wanted to be, and I wasn’t sure what to do about it.”

The feeling persisted until her priest, the Rev. Canon Dr. Dawn Davis, incumbent of Trinity, invited her to join a new program that helped lay leaders get in touch with their spiritual side. It changed her life.

“If I was doing things by rote and wasn’t involving prayer and scripture-reading in my daily life,” says Ms. Bell. “Now I have a renewed confidence and an ability to reach out to others. It’s my job to live into the cross. It’s made me really happy.”

Ms. Bell is one of several people at Trinity who have taken Revive: Equipping Lay Leaders to be Spiritual Leaders. The program was created by Canon Davis to help churchwardens, committee members, property managers, Sunday School teachers, volunteers, and others draw closer to God – something they’re not always able to do in their busy lives.

“I felt that our lay people worked so hard for the Church but in so many ways we’ve never given them the greatest gift – a relationship with God,” says Canon Davis. “I also wanted, in some small way, to thank them for the enormous effort that goes into church leadership.”

The program is being piloted in 10 parishes in the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada by RenewalWorks, a ministry of the Episcopal Church that is dedicated to reinvigorating the Church. “I’m really delighted that it has a chance to go beyond Trinity, because what we achieved can be easily replicated,” says Canon Davis. “We’ve stumbled onto something that is really simple and important.”

Revive invites lay leaders to journey with their clergy for a year. They then adjust their orientation from one of always giving to also receiving. “Instead of ministering only about allowing the church to minister to them,” says Canon Davis. “The program starts with an opening retreat followed by three modules, each lasting about six weeks. In the first module, participants learn several different types of prayer. They develop a prayer practice for themselves and feel confident about praying in public.

In the second module, they learn about scripture and how to lead a Bible meditation group. The third module is about orienting their ministry toward call and voca- tion, rather than just doing a job.

About 12 people and their priest journey together from October to early June, taking a break during the Christmas and Easter seasons. They usually meet one night a week for about two hours. At the end of the program, they attend another retreat and adopt a Rule of Life, a way for them to carry on their life and ministry in a new way.

Canon Davis has run Revive five times in her parish and has seen participants profoundly changed by it. “I saw them fall in love with God,” she said. “They got in touch with the divine workings of God in their lives, and they were able to use a language to express the experience and not feel embarrassed about it.

One of those who have been changed is Mei Zhu, the church’s people warden for the past two years. Ms. Zhu came to Canada from China 16 years ago with no religious background. She says the program gave her a better understanding of the Bible and also a deeper awareness of others who were exploring their faith.

“I don’t feel alone anymore on my spiritual journey,” she says. “Wondering and questioning about God so or so… sometimes it feels awkward to share that. But after the course, I saw there were people on a similar journey and that made me want to open up more and share more. I feel closer to God, closer to a higher purpose.”

Canon Davis says the program has helped to change the face of the church as well. “The congregation had deeper joy because it wasn’t so tired anymore. It was very being spiritually fed. Also, there is much more healthiness around the use of the buildings.”

As a case in point, Trinity welcomed the congregation from Aurora United Church when its church burnt down three years ago. It also removed the pews in its historic chapel to be more innovative at one of its Sunday morning services.

“The things that would probably cause a lot of controversy are embraced with grace,” she says. “They’re still done with a lot of discernment and process and conversations, but there’s not the same kind of conflict that I see in other churches.”

Both Ms. Bell and Ms. Zhu say the program can be used by anyone, not just lay leaders. “It can apply to anyone, whether you’re just starting out and you don’t know what your life’s energy and desire to find God in your life,” says Ms. Bell. Canon Davis adds: “I really hope it helps the Church come to a place where I think it should be, which is faith-forming our people so that we are followers of Christ.”

As we prepare to celebrate the good news of the birth of our Lord and Saviour, please remember those in need with your gift to FaithWorks.

FaithWorks is the annual appeal of the Anglican Diocese of Toronto. Since 1996, FaithWorks has provided more than $25 million to Anglican-affiliated ministries offering help and hope to people in need throughout south-central Ontario and around the world.

When they had finished breakfast, Jesus said to Simon Peter, ‘Simon son of John, do you love me more than these?’ He said to him, ‘Yes, Lord; you know that I love you.’ Jesus said to him, ‘Feed my lambs.’

A second time he said to him, ‘Simon son of John, do you love me?’ He said to him, ‘Yes, Lord; you know that I love you.’ Jesus said to him, ‘Tend my sheep.’

He said to him the third time, ‘Simon son of John, do you love me?’ Peter felt hurt because he said to him the third time, ‘Do you love me?’ And he said to him, ‘Lord, you know everything; you know that I love you.’ Jesus said to him, ‘Feed my sheep.’

JOHN 21: 12-17
New clergy reading group builds bridges

THE STEWARD
BY PETER MISIAZEK

In this past summer my wife, our three kids and I visited Great Britain. It was, first and foremost, a vacation. Over the course of three weeks we traveled some 2,300 km from the Scottish Highlands, through North Wales to meet up with family on my mother’s side (she’s a Jones), then on to Stratford and Canterbury. I could not avoid mixing business with pleasure. Thanks to a grant from the Fellowship of the Maple Leaf, a British-based agency designed to encourage dialogue between the Anglican Church of Canada and the Church of England, I connected with colleagues in Ohan, Scotland; Tungrub and St. Asaph, Wales; and in England. My mission was simple: become more knowledgeable about stewardship education and to learn about their vision of the church for the next 20 years.

The tone of our conversations was hopeful. Even in tiny Argyll and the Isles on Scotland’s west coast where 720 people are identified on parish rolls in 22 congregations, there is a feeling of optimism about the future. Pastors referred here, it has always been about perseverance. The Church has maintained a presence here since St. Columba established a monastic community on Iona in 561 AD.

Stewardship is largely practiced in terms of time and talent – with a heavy emphasis on time. With only a handful of stipendiary clergy, lay people step up as readers, pastoral visitors, and as leaders of prayer and discerner staff. Giving on the collection plate is not substantial, but thanks to outside grants the Church is growing.

Conversations about the need for disciple- ship abound on Argyll and the Isles’ webpage and in parish bulletins. More and more evidence seems to confirm that stewardship follows discipleship, as several parishies have experienced numeric growth in recent years. A couple have even added part-time youth ministers. In a part of the Church where numbers matter, discipleship is making a difference.

A similar experience can be found in North Wales. Discipleship is all the rage here, too. One of the more effective efforts to increase on plate collections have resulted in a near doubling of per-person giving over the past decade. The reason for the growth is two-fold; each congregation needs to be self-sustaining, as there are few external granting opportuni- ties, and a sense of investment values has a positive outcome, as it forced church members to become more actively involved in the life and ministry of the Church. Among active mem- bers, proportionate giving is about 3.5 per cent of household incomes, and the propor- tion is nearly double that for those who use direct debit (no surprise here).

The biggest challenge for the Church of England is discipleship. Adult formation is weak, as the Church has tended to rely on its schools to teach about Christian living and to provide sacramental preparation. Fresh Expressions of Church have resulted in posi- tive outcomes, though growing the Church is hard work, especially as society becomes more secular.

My encounter with colleagues across Britain helped confirmed our assumptions about giving and provided optimism that growth is possible when we focus on disciple- ship.

One thing I took away from my journey that was completely new was a national giv- ing program called Gift Aid. Simply put, it is a reverse tax credit program where the donor designates their tax credit to a charity of his or her choice. Up to 25 per cent of any gift can be re-paid by the government. To put this in Canadian terms, the aver- age donor in Ontario who gives more than $1,000 annually is entitled to an additional per- sonal tax credit. In effect, a gift of $1,000, over the first $200 “costs” the donor $508.40. This credit is used to off-set tax owed.

While I do not believe that a tax advantage is the leading motivator for giving, it might be a consideration for giving more. Consider that a donation of $1,667 would be necessary to actually “cost” the donor $1,000.

December is the most popular time of the year for people to make charitable donations. Many organizations, including churches, are reaching out to up-one-third of their annual rev- enue during this month. If you are able, can you Gift Aid the Church this year? While the procedure does not change, for you to make it happen nonetheless. Up your gift by the value of the tax credit. This way charities will experience their own Christ- mas bonus and you will feel better knowing that your gift has had an even bigger impact.

Priest sheds light on Syria

Foundation trains young ambassadors for peace

BY DIANA SWIFT

LIKE other countries in the Middle East, Syria is a complex multi-sectarian country, once controlled by outside western powers, devastated by wars, permeated by corruption, and dominated in all aspects of life by religion. This was a picture painted by the Rev. Nadim Nassar, the only Syrian-born, Arabic-speaking priest in the Church of England.

Born into a Christian family in the port city of Lattakia, the London-based advocate for interfaith understanding and religious freedom spoke Oct. 16 in Toronto at a presentation sponsored by the Canadian International Council.

Mr. Nassar is a frequent and passionate commentator in the media on international religious affairs. In that role, he has been an outspoken critic of what he considers Archbishop of Canterbury Justin Welby’s “ appalling support” for western military intervention in Syria.

Westerners hold many misconceptions about the Middle East, and it is proving a Herculean task to raise awareness among them, although the Arab Spring has helped somewhat to lift the veil and spark discussion on this region, he said.

“The West does not understand that in the Middle East, religion colours everything – economics, politics, social norms, ethics,” he said. “If you don’t factor in the religious aspect, you have no idea about the issues. But the West has been afraid to talk about religion, it’s taboo.”

Few in the West are aware of Christianity’s deep roots in Syria. “Jesus Christ was born in Palestine and so was legally a Syrian citizen since Palestine was a Roman satel-lite of Syria,” he told a packed audience at the Munk School of Global Affairs at the University of Toronto. Many don’t realize that having “a road to Damascus experience” refers to St. Paul’s conversion to Christianity en route to the ancient Syrian capital, he said.

Yet now, according to figures presented at his talk, resident Christians in Syria have dropped from 1.25 million in 2011 to fewer than half a million today, much of it through death and displacement. “Christian and other minority communities are at risk of being wiped off the map in the Middle East,” said Dr. Mark Sedra, president of the Canadian International Council, in his opening remarks.

Mr. Nassar founded the Awareness Foundation in 2003. It is a Christian charity whose mission is peace building and empowering Christians everywhere to counter intolerance and promote interfaith understanding.

One of its programs is training young people in the Middle East to be ambassadors of peace and preparing them for the democracy that in his native Syria, he faced a very difficult assignment in approaching youth. “Young Syrian Christians were angry, in despair, desperate,” he said. “They were furious with the Church, with God, with the West. They were against everything.” Having lost the lives they had lived in their now-wrecked homeland, has dropped by more than half through death and displacement.

Evangelist tells Christians to fight for justice

Kingdom of God requires change from within, he says

BY DIANA SWIFT

FOR THE REV. DR. TONY CAMPLO, the American evangelist, sociology professor and activist for global justice, the kingdom of God does not refer to an otherworldly afterlife for the righteous saved. It is instead a demanding work in progress in the here and now, as he explained in an often-fiery sermon at Grace Church in Scarborough on Oct. 29.

The Baptist pastor began his address, which ranged from scripture and theology to politics and quantum physics, by asking “What was Jesus’ mission in becoming man?”

“It was, he argued, not to rescue lost souls or to model what it means to be a self-actualizing human being. “It was to declare that the kingdom of God – the one named in the Lord’s Prayer – is at hand.”

Christ wants to transform people from within so that they can change the world into an equitable kingdom as prophesied in the Book of Isaiah, Mr. Campolo said. “Chapter 65 speaks of a time when there will be no infant mortality, when people will live out their lives in health and well-being. It speaks of an age when houses are inhabited by those who build them, and instead of labouring for the benefit of others, workers will instead of labouring for the benefit of others, workers will have created a system that is unjust. He said. “They’re poor because we have created a system that is unjust. That has diminished to 17,000 to one in 200,000 a day,” he said. Furthermore, the number of those lacking access to clean drinking water has dropped from one in six 25 years ago to one in 12 today. “Who drilled most of the wells in developing countries? It’s been Christian people, and we don’t take enough credit for what we’re doing.”

In other gains, he said the global illiteracy rate has fallen over 25 years from 80 per cent to 20 per cent. And the Christian housing mission Habitat for Humanity has just announced the completion of its one millionth house. “Who did most of the literacy training around the world? Christians. And what government can claim to have built a million homes for the poor?” he asked. To keep those statistics moving in a positive direction, he urged attendees to support the world-changing work of Christian organizations.

But to achieve the kingdom of God in a flawed world, Mr. Cam- po argued, people must change from within. “Sometimes mainline denominations forget that people need to be changed individually,” he said. “We get so busy dealing with the social problems of the world that we don’t get the fact that people have to open themselves and let Christ invade them and transform them from within.”

He said he begins every day with 10 or 15 minutes of quiet focusing on Jesus to rid his mind of superfluous agendas while he waits for Christ to reach out from the cross across 2,000 years to connect with him. The paradox that the risen and ascended Christ can still be on the cross in 2017 took his sermon in a fascinating direction, where Christian theology met Einsteinian relativity. Einstein’s theory holds that the faster you travel, the more time is compressed.

“If I could travel at the speed of light, at 196,000 miles per second, all time would be compressed into one instantaneous now,” Mr. Campolo said. That is the way God and Jesus experience time, he said – not, like us, as a series of unfolding events.

“For them, time is an eternal now,” he said, pointing out that when the Jews ask Jesus who he is, Jesus replies. “Before Abraham was, I am,” using the present tense for something that happened eons ago. “That’s why he can be hanging on the cross and still be at my side in the morning. He is like a sponge absorbing all the dark and ugly and sinful things in my life.”

Mr. Campolo stressed that people are very much in need of spiritual cleansing. “Jesus wants to cleanse us. The Holy Spirit cannot flow into us unless we cleanse,” he said. He emphasized the sacramental nature of reaching out to the poor and needy, the “least” of the world, and in so doing embracing Jesus. “I feel the presence of Christ in them,” he said.

Mr. Campolo also urged people to challenge governments that support the exploitation of the resources of impoverished countries, citing the example of the tax-free exporting of Nigerian petroleum by oil companies with the blessing of the Nigerian government. “Taxes on those billions of dollars in oil could provide schools and medical centres and food for the people,” he said.

He also noted that government-subsidized wheat and rice exports from Canada and the United States have destroyed the livelihoods of grain farmers in Haiti. “People in developing countries are not poor because they’re lazy,” Mr. Campolo said. “They’re poor because we have created a system that is unjust. God calls for justice. We need not only charity but we need justice.”

Local expertise, partnership gets results

By Stuart Mann

PARISHIONS who sit in the back pews at Holy Trinity, Thornhill, will be feeling a little warmer this winter, thanks to the efforts of the church’s Green Team.

During a recent green energy audit of the church building, the team was pleased to learn that a small section of the roof wasn’t properly insulated.

“The parishioners in the back pews were always saying they were cold, and we thought it was because they were sitting close to the entrance door,” explains Iverson Arango, Swan li, Dianne Rimmer, Ron Tolhurst, Iverson Grimes, Robin Pararas, Peter Perrella, Brian Lang, Donna Lang, the Toronto animator from the diocese, including St. Cuthbert, Leaside and St. Matthew, Islington, to reduce their carbon footprints. She is hosting an “Energy Savings Webinar” for churches on Jan. 24 from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. The webinar will look at incentives and rebates for retrofits, lighting, heating and cooling. It will also examine how a United Church in Toronto reduced its lighting consumption by 10 per cent and saved money. During the webinar, Ms. Lang will launch a three-year project that helps faith communities measure their energy and greenhouse gas footprint. For more information, contact Ms. Lang at dlang@faithcommonsogood.org.

The team's initial task was to analyze the church's energy consumption and identify the building assets such as the heating and cooling system, the insulation in the walls and roof, and the windows and lighting. The study showed that the church was relatively energy efficient, but there was still room for improvement.

The team presented its findings at the church's 2016 vestry meeting and was given $5,000 from the parish's Our Faith-Our Hope fund to continue its work. It also received a $1,000 grant from Faith and the Common Good, a national faith network, to conduct a green audit of the church. The audit cost $1,500, so the church had to pay just $500.

Mr. Grimes says Mr. Collette was easy-going and patient. “He was very easy to work with.”

The audit was an eye-opening experience, he says. “Stephen’s team was able to point out stuff that really needed to be done, and identified areas that gave us the biggest bang for our money. They pointed out areas of concern that we hadn’t even thought about.”

Some of Mr. Collette’s recommendations include replacing old air conditioning fans in the balcony storage area that have been covered over, stopping cold air from drifting down into the heated area. The simple renovation, done by parishioners at a cost of $140, will save hundreds of dollars in heating bills over the coming winters.

Mr. Collette also gave some practical advice. He cautioned the church against accepting donations of old appliances from parishioners, as they usually weren’t energy efficient.

Some of Mr. Collette’s recommendations will require a greater investment of time and money. For example, the church plans to upgrade its lighting system to LED bulbs, at a cost of about $15,000. It also hopes to replace its air conditioning system with a new, energy efficient model in the next year or two.

The church’s vestry provided the Green Team with a further $10,000 this year from its Our Faith-Our Hope funds, so it now has about $44,000 in hand to make the changes. But Mr. Grimes admits the group might have to go looking for government grants to pay for those and other high-end improvements.

Still, he’s happy with the progress to date. “For now, we said, let’s concentrate on the low-hanging fruit. Yes, we may not be able to do the high-cost things right away, but there’s a benefit to doing the low-cost things. We have 50 to 60 items on the list and have done a lot of them.”

He says Holy Trinity has shared its knowledge with other churches that want to go green but don’t know how to start. “They’re a little intimidated, but we explain that you’re not going to do it all at once. We’ve gone through this without too much pain, and you can too.”

Donna Lang, the Toronto animator for Greening Sacred Spaces, has worked with several parishes in the diocese, including St. Cuthbert, Leaside and St. Matthew, Islington, to reduce their carbon footprints. She is hosting an “Energy Savings Webinar” for churches on Jan. 24 from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. The webinar will look at incentives and rebates for retrofits, lighting, heating and cooling. It will also examine how a United Church in Toronto reduced its lighting consumption by 10 per cent and saved money. During the webinar, Ms. Lang will launch a three-year project that helps faith communities measure their energy and greenhouse gas footprint. Corrections

The late Rev. Campbell Russell served at St. Philip the Apostle, Caribou in Toronto, not St. Philip the Apostle, Etobicoke, as reported in the October issue. In the same issue, Archbishop Johnson was referring to the Thirty Years War, not the Hundred Years War, in his Diary. The Anglican regrets the errors.

Conference urges equity for all

Event focuses on racial, ethnic diversity

BY MURRAY MACADAM

PARTICIPANTS at the diocese’s annual Outreach and Advocacy Conference heard a powerful call to work for equity in the Church and society, and grappled with ways to bring it about. The conference, held on Nov. 4 at St. John, York Mills, drew 100 people from across the diocese and marked the first time that the event focused on racial and ethnic diversity.

Keynote speaker Dr. Carl James, the Jean Augustine Chair in Education at York University, spelled out the difference between equity and equality, and highlighted how inequality is built on racism. “We don’t want equality of opportunity, because that means treating everyone the same,” he said. “What we want is equity, which takes everyone’s situation into account and is based on justice.”

Canadians are proud of their country as a multicultural oasis, a colour-blind society, said Dr. James. Yet while most people don’t like talking about it, race is a core reality of life in Canada, he noted. “Whiteness is taken for granted,” he said, and we need to think about how whiteness, which we see as “normal,” is impacting our lives. “If we don’t address this then as a white priest, then we are using whiteness,” he said.

Diversity is an ongoing challenge, and we need to think about diversity in all we do. “The work we have to do is bring people to a consciousness that we’re all in this together,” he said. We need to constantly think about what offends people from other backgrounds, which is not always easy. “We have to become comfortable with uncomfortability,” he added.

A lively question period followed his address. Bishop Peter Fenty, the area bishop of York-Simcoe, asked how we can respond to racist comments, and asked, “How do we confront the fact that systemic racism is real?”

The Rev. Canon Don Butler, incumbent of Trinity, Barrie, said that when he does the interment service for a person who is black and is buried in the waterfront at night, people steer clear of him as a tall black man. When he did the interment service for a local resident, people were shocked to see a black priest. He appealed to the audience to have courage to confront racism, “to be mindful of who we are called to be as people of God.”

Workshops explored issues of accessibility, understanding privilege, confronting racism, Indigenous issues, youth and social justice, and climate change. Brother Reginald-Martin Crenshaw, OHC, an associate at St. Paul, Reudale, led a workshop on dismantling racism in the parish. It defined racism as racial bias combined with the misuse of structures and institutions, so that one group’s racial bias is institutionalized by its power, based on its perceived racial superiority. The workshop contrasted personal and systemic racism, with the latter, like the water in which a fish swims, being so pervasive that it is not perceived easily. Everyone is born into it and socialized to play well-defined roles.

Imam Ilyas Ally of the Islamic Information & Dawah Centre, a mosque in Toronto, and the Rev. Gary van der Meer, the incumbent of St. Anne, Toronto, discuss building interfaith friendships.

The Rev. Gary van der Meer, incumbent at St. Anne, Toronto, provided a practical example of interfaith inclusion in action during a workshop he led with Imam Ilyas Ally. The workshop focused on the growing friendship between St. Anne’s and Imam Ally’s Muslim community. It has included interfaith learning events and joint sponsorship of a refugee family.

Mike Walker, a student completing a doctorate in a theology of disability, told a workshop on accessibility and solidarity that “ableism is a sin” (ableism is discrimination in favour of able-bodied people). He has cerebral palsy, and after noting that people with disabilities are sometimes labeled as “a retard,” or “cripple,” he said, “I’d rather have names like friend or brother.”

Participants explored the notion of “sacramental solidarity” and how baptism and Holy Communion can lead all people into Jesus’ embrace. They agreed with a suggestion that the Church develop official programs to educate parishes on disability issues, just as it does on sexual misconduct concerns.

Karri Munn-Venn of Citizens for Public Justice led a climate change workshop in which participants highlighted the people and places most immediately impacted by climate change: people of colour, former colonies, and communities that have contributed little to the problem. A discussion outlined the inconsistencies in Canada’s approach to climate change, including tensions between respect for Indigenous rights and pipeline approval, and between the Paris Agreement and ongoing fossil fuel subsidies. The workshop wrapped up with an impassioned call to minimize our environmental impacts, engage church leaders on the Christian imperative to care for the Earth, and to demand action from the federal government.

Parishes were invited to take part in CPJ’s Give it up for the Earth! campaign, which invites individuals to commit to reducing greenhouse gas emissions, while urging the federal government to increase climate action. For more information, visit cpj.ca/for-the-earth.

Faith leaders hold ‘pray-in’

Faith leaders from across Toronto marked the International Day for the Eradication of Poverty on Oct. 17 by occupying City Hall and performing a “pray-in” in front of Mayor John Tory’s office. Among those taking part in the demonstration was Bishop Kevin Robertson, the area bishop of York Scarborough.

The faith group, called “Faith in the City,” says Mayor Tory and City Council are not doing enough to combat poverty and called for greater investments in the city’s most vulnerable residents, expected to be released in February.

“We have seen Council commit to strategies and projects to tackle staggering inequality in our city, but when the time comes to funding these priorities, our leaders can’t seem to make the leap,” said Imam Habeel Ali. “We’re here to urge Council to stick to its own promises in the upcoming budget.”

Council unanimously adopted the Toronto Poverty Reduction Strategy in 2015 and has provided funding for some measures but says it cannot fully fund the plan without increasing taxes or using some other forms of revenue.

The faith leaders affirmed the need for good transit, affordable housing and the importance of good jobs in eradicating poverty. “Our city’s most vulnerable residents, including one in four children, desperately need access to affordable housing and reliable transit help lift them out of poverty,” said Elder Kim Running Bear McDougall of the Ojibwa Nation.

“It is important to unite with people across Toronto in pushing for action on inequality and poverty,” said Bishop Robertson.

“We must work together to urge our politicians to follow through on their own commitments.”

Online Advent calendar returns

As we begin a new church year in Advent, Christians around the world are once again turning to social media to pray through their phones and share their experience of expectant waiting for Jesus Christ. For the fourth year in a row, the Anglican Communion is inviting Anglicans to join Advent Word, its global online Advent calendar. Everyone who signs up will receive a daily email with a prayer and a photo based on a different word each day. They’ll also be invited to respond on social media with their own prayers and photos, using the hashtag #AdventWord and the word of the day. Episcopal area hosts town hall

Bishop Jenny Andison is inviting all interested clergy and laypeople to a follow-up to the York-Credit Valley September town hall. This gathering will take place on Jan. 13 from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. at St. John the Baptist, Dixie, 719 Dundas St. E., Mississauga. Participants will consider how to realign area resources to strengthen existing ministries and focus on opportunities identified as needing more attention. Those who attended the September town hall are particularly encouraged to attend.

SPECIAL DAY

The Bridge Prison Ministry and Regeneration Outreach Community, two agencies that help ex-prisoners and the poor and homeless in Brampton, marked World Homeless Day on Oct. 13 at Grace Place in Brampton. The event included a photo exhibit by homeless people, the launch of a cookbook for those living in poverty, and a hot meal using food bank items. Above, cookbook designer Lisa Lawless (second from left) joins Susan Kochie (left), Garry Głowacki and Natalie Pereira of The Bridge at the event. At right and left are some of the photos taken by homeless people in Brampton. The burr in the top-right photo indicates that someone spent the night there. The Bridge is a FaithWorks partner and received a grant from the York-Credit Valley episcopal area to create the cookbook, called Living Well on Less. MAIN PHOTO BY MICHAEL HUDSON

Mr. Nassar related well to their nihilism since he had lived for seven years in Beirut during the Lebanese Civil War of 1975-1990. He won their confidence by showing them he was not just another expatriate living safely in the West.

He heard them out quietly, and his listening was rewarded. “It was an incredible experience turning a person from despair to embracing the idea, ‘I can be an ambassador for peace in my own broken country,’” he said.

One positive step the West can take for Syria is to use its leverage to encourage negotiations between the country’s warring factions, with the goal of re-establishing peaceful co-existence. “Why are we not pushing toward Syrian-to-Syrian dialogue?” he asked.

Mr. Nassar has long supported all interested clergy and laypeople to a follow-up to the York-Credit Valley September town hall. This gathering will take place on Jan. 13 from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. at St. John the Baptist, Dixie, 719 Dundas St. E., Mississauga. Church has plans for derelict space

HAMILTON - A church is planning to transform a derelict property that once housed a biker gang into an urban haven of peace, beauty and community service. Last year, the Diocese of Niagara authorized the Parish of St. James and St. Brendan in Port Colborne to purchase a property across the street from the church, consisting of an overgrown lot and two buildings. The empty lot will be made into a parkette with benches, artwork, trees and a fountain - an inviting spot for lunch breaks, art shows, concerts or weddings. The former biker gang clubhouse will be repurposed to house a youth outreach centre that will provide mentoring projects to youth, including bike-rebuilding classes. The project will cost close to $600,000, and the parish is undertaking a “multi-pronged approach” to raising funds.

Church gets new lease on life

VICTORIA - Parishioners have converted an Anglican church on Salt Spring Island, off Vancouver Island, B.C., into a centre for fostering spirituality of all kinds. On Sept. 30, a development team composed of members of the Salt Spring Anglican Parish officially opened the Spirit Center of the Sea Centre for Spiritual Living and Practice, located in the former St. Mary’s Church, Fulford, B.C. The centre, team members said, will offer programming of various kinds in spirituality and the arts with the goal of serving as a bridge not only between Christians but also between Christians and those of other faiths, or of no defined faith.

The idea for the centre arose about three years ago, when members of the Salt Spring Anglican Parish – which included three churches, including St. Mary’s - felt that more could be done with St. Mary’s, which was falling into disuse.

Diocese founds discipleship school

SASKATOON - The Diocese of Saskatoon has established a “school without walls” for providing free, diocese-wide mentoring and support in discipleship. St. Brigid School of Discipleship offers short classes for all levels of discipleship, from those who are curious about Christianity to training for lay readers, deacons and priests. It also provides courses in apologetics for first-time parishioners, training in advanced spiritual care and theological reflection, and continuing education programs for clergy. Instruction is by diocesan clergy and lay specialists, who travel to parishes throughout the three deaneries, eliminating the need for students to travel long distances to attend the classes.

AGENTS OF CHANGE

Young Anglicans and youth ministers from across the diocese attend the ReCharge Youth Retreat, held Oct. 27-29 at Mountsberg Warren camp in Rouyn, Ontario. Participants learned how God has called them both individually and as the Church to be agents of change within their own communities. Despite the rainy, cold weather, they also enjoyed indoor rock climbing, indoor skating, archery, basketball and a bonfire. The event was organized by the Archbishop’s Youth Ministry Committee, and 133 teens aged 12-17 attended.

Church secretaries gather in Oshawa

Demanding position often misunderstood, says writer

BY HELEN ELBERTSEN

THE Professional Church Secretaries’ Association’s annual conference took place from Sept. 30 to Oct. 3 in Oshawa. Attended by 55 church secretaries and administrators from all over southern Ontario, the event was a great way to get to know people who work in a very secluded profession.

The church secretary’s position is often misunderstood by the outside world and can be seen as “not a real job” and being done by “grandma types” who have nothing better to do. This could not be further from the truth.

A church secretary often runs the day-to-day business of the church, and her or his job can include bookkeeping, hall rental booking, building maintenance troubleshooting, assisting church committees, taking minutes, lending a pastoral ear, and booking funerals and weddings, to name just a few - oh, yes, and preparing Sunday bulletins!

The church secretary’s job is exclusive, and anyone in this position usually finds that there is no one to turn to for assistance, advice or just to vent frustrations. That’s why the association is so valuable.

Made up of church secretaries and administrators from across southern Ontario, and from many denominations, our membership allows us to have constant contact with others doing the same job. Solutions to problems or advice can be received easily and quickly via email or a quick phone call.

Each fall for the past 24 years, we have gathered as a group in various cities and towns across the province for a three-day extravaganza of learning and fun. This year’s theme was “Learning with Laughter.” There are workshops dealing with all kinds of relevant topics from “How to Leverage Technology” to “Stopping Elder Abuse” and “Stress is Funny.” Over the years, we have learned about conflict management, working with volunteers, copyright laws and many other subjects.

The conferences are not all about work. There is great entertainment and enjoyable outings to local hot spots. This year, we were entertained by the Howling Heretics, a wonderful musical duo from Jubilee United Church in Scarborough, whose musical talent and humorous biblical references kept us laughing and cheering for almost two hours. Day trips included tastings and shopping at a local winery and a visit to a working flour mill and lumber mill; their homemade doughnuts were to die for!

I invite all church secretaries and administrators in the diocese to join us in 2018 when we celebrate our 25th anniversary in the London and Stratford area. For more information, visit www.pcpsa.ca.

Service supports people of the Caribbean

Many in diocese have loved ones back home

BY STUART MANN

A service of solidarity and support for the people of the Caribbean is being held after hurricanes devastated parts of the region this fall.

The service will be held on Saturday, Dec. 2 at 3 p.m. at St. Andrew, Scarborough, 2525 Victoria Park Ave. The guest preacher will be Bishop Peter Penty, the area bishop of York-Simcoe and a native of Barbados.

“It is a visible sign that we care,” says the Rev. Jacqueline Daley, one of the organizers. “For some of us, we have very close connections to the Caribbean. This is to gather together and support each other and say we’re in this together!”

Ms. Daley says many people in the diocese have family and friends in the Caribbean who were affected by the hurricanes. “Although it happened far away, it felt very near. Everyone has a story to tell.”

The service is being organized by a group of clergy and laity in partnership with the Canadian Friends to West Indian Christians, a group in the diocese that has supported the work of the Church in the Province of the West Indies for many years.

“The service is important because when our brothers and sisters in the Caribbean region hurt, we hurt because we are from there,” says Elsa Jones, chair of the Canadian Friends to West Indian Christians. “We are in a position to help, I think it is important that we as Christians do what Christ would have called us to do.”

Ms. Daley hopes the service will be a first step toward ongoing support for relief efforts for the region. “We hope to have an offering at the service but also to find ways that people can commit to long-term support,” she says.

All are invited to the service. “We are God’s family and God’s people, and all are welcome,” she says.

FOR WEST INDIES

About 100 people attended the annual Bishop Angela Brown and Bishop Basil Tonks Dinner, a fundraiser of the Canadian Friends to West Indian Christians, at St. Andrew, Scarborough on Nov. 4. Bishop Calvert Leopold Friday of St. Vincent and the Grenadines (third from left), the evening’s guest speaker, received a cheque for $5,000 for work in his diocese. Joining him from left, Bishop Kevin Robertson, area bishop of York-Scarborough, Elsa Jones, chair of the Canadian Friends to the West Indian Christians, and the Rev. Canon Jim Garland, project coordinator. At right, pianist Vince Cato plays during the dinner. PHOTOS BY MICHAEL HUDSON

We have an awesome God who loves us

agents of change for the common good. Jesus’ mission, in which we are privileged to share, is about transformation for the salvation of humanity.

This means in which we live are very troubling and can so easily lead us into being fearful and full of despair. There is much suffering, pain and inhumane behaviour in our world. The perpetrators of inhumane behaviours want us to stop believing in God, in Jesus Christ and in the Holy Spirit. They want us to stop living into those Christian values which inform godly and righteous living. We cannot and must not give in to the negativity that pervades our communities. As believers in Jesus of Nazareth, we are to be witnesses to the work of a liberating, life-giving and loving God whom we worship and serve.

Archbishop Michael Curry, the presiding bishop of The Episcopal Church in America, often speaks about how God, in coming among us in the person of Jesus Christ, came to transform this world from the nightmare it often is, to the dream that God intends for us all.

My sisters and brothers in Christ, we have an awesome God who loves us, a gospel to proclaim, and a witness to carry out as disciples of the One who came among us, that we might have life in all its fullness. In the story of our Lord’s birth, we are reminded again and again that he came to show us a way to love and a way to live. To us is born our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who invites us in the power of his Spirit to follow him. As we celebrate God’s gift of himself to the world this Christmas, may we live out the peace and goodwill heralded by the angelic hosts. I wish you all a blessed and happy Christmas, and good health in 2018.

Bishop Peter Penty is the area bishop of York-Simcoe.

Christian unity week resources available

The next Week of Prayer for Christian Unity will take place Jan. 18-25, 2018. This is an annual ecumenical celebration that invites Christians around the world to pray for the unity of all Christians, reflect on scripture together, participate in ecumenical services and share fellowship. The theme for 2018 comes from the Caribbean region: “Your right hand, O Lord, glorious in power” (Exodus 15:6). For more information and resources, visit www.weekofprayer.ca.
